In the meantime the Herschell Committee is still continuing its inquiries in relation to the currency of the Eastern Crown Colonies. Mr. "Gulland urged various minor objections to the proposed British dollar, alleging that the movement was made in the interests of the Banks, who would hereafter try to get a still point he makes worthy of consideration is the inexpediency of introducing the British the standard. He therefore moved an should delay coming to any decision on the question till they were in possession of the Governor's objections to the proposed dollar. but the amendment was lost and the original motion carried. It would seem, however, from the fact of the Governor of the Straits not supporting the movement, and in view of the strength of the opposition, that we are not quite so near the realisation of the desire generally entertained in this Colony for a British dollar as was supposed. In the event of the Straits deciding to link their currency proposed new coin in sufficient quantities to

A proposal of that kind would naturalthe storekeepers, and all whose incomes are dependent upon fixed charges, but the merchants would for the most part oppose it to the utmost, for they see a profit in cheap silver. As affecting the industries of the Colony the change would be fatal : there would be no inducement to start new industries, and those already established, such as sugar refining and ropemaking, would suffer in the same way that the Indian yarn trade has suffered.

A PERUSAL of the Phra Yot judgment
